Achieving Accreditation
Improving health care quality through accreditation
AAHC accreditation is focused on continuous improvement in quality and safety. The Standards create a framework to improve and maintain high-quality, patient-centered health care organizations. Accreditation is an exercise in compliance and can be used to build a better, safer, more efficient, and effective health care organization. Achieving Accreditation is an immersive two-day seminar designed to help you strengthen your tools, assemble your resources, and get more from accreditation.

FRIDAY: PART I

Solid Foundation
Highly effective organizations start with a set of clearly defined structures and systems. For an ambulatory health care organization, AAHC identifies these broadly as:

- Rights and Responsibilities of Patients
- Governance
- Administration
- Quality of Care
- Clinical Records
- Infection Prevention and Safety
- Facilities and Environment

Achieving Accreditation opens with a general session addressing these topics that apply to all organizations. Achieving Accreditation is taught by AAHC surveyors experienced in bringing these topics to life with examples and descriptions of what they look for to confirm that these elements are in place and functioning.

FRIDAY: PART II

Quality Improvement
Which tools enhance quality?
In breakout sessions built around specific practice settings, you’ll be introduced to the AAHC Quality Improvement tool to establish the baseline for your quality improvement program. You’ll learn how to use the data you’re already collecting, how to apply benchmarking metrics to evaluate current performance and set achievable goals, and how it transforms a quality activity into a quality study.

SATURDAY: PART I

Impactful Topics
With your surgical or primary care peers, review the relevant AAHC adjunct Standards. Then, move to elective sessions that address the needs of your organization. Past conference topics have included infection prevention risk assessment, Life Safety Code requirements for Medicare-certified ASCs, tested solutions for Medical Home practices, scenario-based emergency management, and more.

quality every day
1095 STRONG

1093 Strong is a transformational movement and call-to-action spearheaded by the AAHC. To equip ambulatory leaders with the best of what they need to operate effective quality practices while remaining cost effectively compliant. The three-year or 1,095-day period between accreditations, is a critical time when ambulatory health organizations, with help from proven experts, can develop the kind of everyday habits that enable leaders in the industry to provide the best in quality care to their patients, with less cost and more predictability.
